

LIKE MINDS, LIKE MINE
Whakaitia te Whakawhiu i te Tangata

COUNTERING STIGMA AND DISCRIMINATION ASSOCIATED WITH MENTAL ILLNESS

EMPLOYMENT

what you do makes the difference

Work is an activity central to the lives and wellbeing of most of us. Unfortunately, for people with experience of mental illness, enjoying the benefits of work can be undermined by stigma and discrimination.

Mental health is everybody's business

Any one of us can experience mental illness at some time in our lives. This could include yourself, your staff, your customers or clients. Most people who experience a mental illness recover and it is discrimination, rather than mental illness that is likely to affect productivity and staff morale.

Discrimination has damaging results

Discrimination in the workplace can negatively impact on a person's life and can take many forms, from stereotyping to being treated differently or unfairly. It can result in exclusion from jobs, loss of promotion or poor remuneration. It can also restrict access to certain occupations and to training. It may also mean that employers miss out on or lose trained, skilled and valuable staff.

Diversity brings benefits

Looking beyond a person's mental illness makes good business sense - increasing the diversity and skill of your staff pool means improved service and satisfied customers. It enables you to employ the best person for the job and develop flexible employment policies for everyone.

CELEBRATING
10 YEARS
OF LIKE MINDS, LIKE MINE

“Aubrey challenged us all the time to think about how we could help others and having someone with a mental illness in your workplace teaches you a whole lot of things you don’t learn in any university, or learn from any books. It teaches you about tolerance, patience and empathy and support – and about looking after people, and at the end of the day I believe the greatest resource in any organisation is its people”.

Dame Susan Devoy, Like Minds, Like Mine television campaign

Remember, some of the most inspirational people in the world have experienced mental illness including John Cleese, Albert Einstein, Audrey Hepburn and New Zealanders Denise L’Estrange Corbet, Mahinarangi Tocker and John Kirwan.

The best person for the job might just have a mental illness.

We all have rights and responsibilities

Under the Human Rights Act, employers are obliged by law to make reasonable accommodations for employees in regards to any illness or disability.

This is not special treatment. In fact many employees need some changes at work to help them perform to their full potential.

A parent who works full time may need time off to collect a sick child from school; an office worker with lower back pain may need changes to their workstation.

Likewise, changes such as flexible working hours, may be required for people who have experience of mental illness.

A workplace that doesn’t discriminate

Providing an inclusive workplace will benefit you and your employees. Some of the actions employers can take include:

- Not discriminating due to illness or disability.
- Providing disability awareness training in the workplace.
- Understanding that taking an anti-discrimination stand does not mean you cannot be honest and direct with employees about their performance.
- Taking a flexible but consistent approach to staff illness. Recognising that arrangements that suit one person may not necessarily suit another.
- Having a workplace plan for all types of health emergencies, including mental health.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

This resource was produced by the Mental Health Foundation of New Zealand on behalf of the Ministry of Health’s Like Minds, Like Mine programme.

For more information on countering stigma and discrimination, or the Like Minds, Like Mine programme, visit – www.likeminds.org.nz

For information about mental health and mental illness:

MENTAL HEALTH FOUNDATION RESOURCE AND INFORMATION CENTRE

Tel: 09 300 7010 Fax: 09 300 7020
Email: resource@mentalhealth.org.nz
Website: www.mentalhealth.org.nz

GOOD WORKPLACE POLICY AND PRACTICE

If you would like more information, advice or resources on good workplace policy and practice and the benefits of a mentally healthy workplace, contact –

WORKING WELL

Mental Health Foundation of New Zealand
Tel: 0800 4WORKING (0800 496 754)
Website: www.workingwell.co.nz

EEO TRUST - Equal Employment Opportunities

Tel: 09 525 3023 Fax: 09 525 7076
Email: library@eeotrust.org.nz
Website: www.eeotrust.org.nz

WORKWISE EMPLOYMENT AGENCY

Employment services connecting people with experience of mental illness and employers
Website: www.workwisetrust.co.nz

THE HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Tel: 09 309 0874 Fax: 09 377 3593
Freephone: 0800 496 877
Website: www.hrc.co.nz

THE MENTAL HEALTH COMMISSION

Tel: 04 474 8900 Fax: 04 474 8901
Email: info@mhc.govt.nz
Website: www.mhc.govt.nz

Local Like Minds, Like Mine contact details:

CELEBRATING
10 YEARS
OF LIKE MINDS, LIKE MINE